

Poul Holm

Poul Holm is Professor of Environmental History at Trinity College Dublin and Academic Director of the Trinity Long Room Hub, the research institute for the arts and humanities. He has been a Senior Curator at the Fisheries and Maritime Museum, Esbjerg, Denmark; Professor of Maritime History at the University of Southern Denmark; Rector (President) of the University of Roskilde. He has served on national and European committees such as the Danish Research Council for the Humanities (chairman 2001-5), the European Society for Environmental History (President 2005-7), and the EU DG Research METRIS group (chairman 2008-9).

His doctoral thesis examined the impact of war on everyday life in Norway, Sweden and Denmark between 1550 and 1914. He has published on fisheries history and marine environmental history; coastal communities and culture; and the Viking settlements in Ireland. He is currently chair of the History of Marine Animal Populations project, HMAP, which is a global project of some 100 associate historians, archaeologists and marine scientists aiming to understand human impact on ocean ecology. He is the lead author of "Marine Animal Populations: A New Look Back In Time", Life in the World's Oceans: Diversity, Distribution and Abundance, Oxford, Blackwell, 3-23.
